

Who can make decisions at the SRA

Updated 2 May 2024 (Updated from 30 May 2023)

This document [formerly known as 'Schedule of delegations'] outlines who can make regulatory decisions at the Solicitors Regulation Authority (SRA) and their role and responsibilities. We have included a glossary function which explains some technical phrases used throughout this document.

How does delegation work?

The SRA Board can delegate its functions to sub-committees and individuals, including to SRA staff. The Board's executive functions and regulatory powers are also delegated by the Board to the Executive.

Below, we have set out the regulatory decisions that are delegated to certain staff groups or individuals to make. All staff are sufficiently trained, experienced and competent to make these decisions. The Chief Executive is able at any time to delegate authority on a case by case basis unless the rules themselves set out who can make a decision.

In this document:

- Any references to standards, regulations or statutory provisions include any updated or amended versions produced following the publication of this document.
- References to a job title or role includes individuals undertaking the same or equivalent role in the future, should the job title or role change.
